

Convincing-Guiding-Influencing

How to manage every conversation

Seminar objective

In our professional environment, we are constantly talking, arguing, and negotiating. In the process, employees and colleagues often try to influence us - it's about strategic or other company- or customer-specific topics. Likewise, we also consciously and unconsciously influence our interlocutors. If we can see through these processes, we can deal more successfully with customers, employees, colleagues and superiors and communicate our ideas - and of course also assert them.

Seminar content

Basics:

- Listening well, an important basis of conversation control
- How do customers and colleagues influence us?
- Why do we sometimes like to be influenced?: Influence or be influenced? - The psychology of influence
- Recognizing subtle signals or words

Influence or be influenced?:

- Recognizing contradictory signals
- When do body language and content not match?
- What builds up resistance? What reduces it?
- The unbeatable effect of authenticity, spontaneity, genuineness and simplicity
- The glasses of one's own prejudices
- Successful convincing and good presentation of your own arguments

Developing expertise: "seeing" and "hearing" the other person:

- How do I become a better listener?
- Charisma presence and attention
- Awakening emotions through suggestive communication
- What qualities do you use to win others over?
- Recognize the benefits of silence - listening helps you focus better
- Win customers through persuasion

Develop your own path:

- Finding a framework: constructive conversation culture
- Finding your own style - listening and asking the right questions
- Balancing good interview preparation & spontaneity
